Enumerators Encounter Queer People: Have Wonderful Experiences.

WOMEN GUARD THEIR AGE WITH DESPERATE SECRECY

One District Canvasser Tells of Curious Things That Fell to Him.

Doubtiess there will be more col umns written about things connected with the taking of the thirteenth census than on any topic or event that has come to public attention for many years. Every enumerator will have until have an ample supply of water from the high-line service, as all of the of The Tribune Tuesday, and the following, in substance, was the burden of his remarks:

"Generally when I would go to a door and ring, and, after having told my rulesion to the person who answered. I would be invited in, given a chair and sometimes a good table to write on, and told to go ahead with my questions. Some of the people who had been reading all that the newspapers had to say about the census were greatly surprised at the small number of questions, remarking that they thought they would be pumped dry with every kind of a question that man could make up. Others, who had read little or nothing concerning the census, were almost taken off their feet by the Tot of foolish questions, and personal, too, that you have no right in asking, but the malority of people by far were kind and helped in every way to give all but the majority of people by far were cind and helped in every way to give all he information in a correct way. Some ven would get down the big family Bible and give with absolute precision the rear, month, day and sometimes even he hour of birth of the children. Others, of course, as we expected, would ook at us as if to say, 'I won't. Then we would have to use all our tact to et the right age from the woman or irl, as the case might be. One girl, linking that the name and age would o in the city directory, said she was but s, but after it was explained to her that ac census had nothing to do with the irrectory, she said her age could be put with the said her age could be said her age to said her age could be said her age to said he

Women "Sidestep" Age Question.

At one place a young woman was sit ting on the porch when I called, he mother in the house by an open window Taking the name of the mother first, asked her how old she was. She plaint asked her how old she was. She plaint and firmly said, "Thirty." Her daughter although having heard, said, "How old did you say, mother? This time she plainty and firmly said. Thirty-five However, I left a blank space for he ege, resolving to get this answer last ther daughter gave her age at 22, are after getting all the information I needed I stepped up to the window and said Madam, there seems to be a slight mistake somewhere in your age. Could you 'Madam, there seems to be a slight mis-take somewhere in your age. Could you please give me your correct age?' And this time she most firmly and positiver said. 'Yes I can, but I won't.' But after I talked to her for a few minutes, show-ing her the necessity of it, she came through with an age well beyond 45. "One woman declared she would no give her age or even her name to me published to the world.' She, too, after being told how secret all information was kept, told all that was needed.

No Race Suicide.

No Race Suicide.

"Of course, we occasionally ran across some peculiar name. At one place, where the young couple's only child was a boy of a months, born about the time the airship croze was raging over Europe and the east, carried the notable Christian name of 'Air Ship.'

"There certainly was no race suicide in some of the families we visited. I believe I commerated seven sets of twins in my district. Others I spoke to went even higher than that, but imagine my surprise at one place where I was asking a young woman how many children her mother, who was living with her, had had, when she said 'twenty-two.' I could had, when she said 'twenty-two.' I could hardly believe my ears, thinking at first she had given the years of her mother's marriage. But she finally convinced me that her mother had had twenty-two children, most of them twins and triplets. All, however, were born in England. She said their neighbor in England had twenty-one living children. I left the house thinking that there was something in the world big anyway.

The Servant Girl when she said 'twenty-two

The Servant Girl.

The Servant Girl.

'At one place, after having received all the information from the head of the family except that of the servant, he told me he would send the girl in herself and she would give it. She came in herself. Yes, I should think she did. And with her all the fre and blaze that she had collected for years. She set herself firmly in the doorway, and said, with anger and scorn in her Irish brogue, 'Whaat do ye want av me?' It asked her name first and got it. Then I louched off the bomb by asking her age. She blazed up in a fury and screamed out, 'Me name is Mary O'Hara an' I tell me age to no wan' and stamped out of the room, the head of the house bravely following her up to the kitchen, and from the weight and quality of the words it had a good-sized wall between us. 'The man soon came back and said she refused to tell. I could tell that through the sizzling sentences I had caught from the kitchen. I then told the man that there was a law that would force her to tell under penalty of $100 nme. Fortified the sizzling sentences I had caught from the kitchen. I then told the man that there was a law that would force her to tell under penalty of $190 hme. Fortified with this law, he again brayely stormed her in her fortress. Her first refusal was tame compared to this one. Her words fairly burned through the intervening wall, and she had gained her second wind, so that she kept it up until he had to retreat in utter defeat, saying, as a sort of an apology, that they were not going to keep her long. He finally persuaded me to return in the evening, whon she would be in a better humor. When I called that evening her anger had but slightly abated, but we learned she was born in Ireland, and then, asking her warfly how old she was when she came to the United States and in what year, we finally deducted how old she was but of course never told her we had it or even wanted it.

"It was surprising to see how many of course never told her we had it or even wanted it.

"It was surprising to see how many people came from Pennsylvania. This state had by far more people from there than from any other state.

"Another curious fact was that I met three persons who had been enumerators, respectively, ten, thirty and forty years ago."

IGNORANT OF FACTS

City Engineer Explains Real Purposes of Changes in Watermains.

According to the statement of City engineer George F. McGonagle, the peode who are protesting against the removal of the water mains from along the boulevard in the northeastern par of the city are greatly misinformed as to the intentions of the city council in that respect, or they do not understand the situation at all.

The water mains have been along the boulevard on Eleventh avenue and across the north end of the City cemetery to the military reservation. is not the intention of the council to remove the mains from Eleventh avenue between B and N streets at all, but only those mains which are strong across bench will have an ample supply of water from the higu-line service, as all of the cross siteeds are already connected with six-inch mains, and the only portlen of the city which will be affected by the change at all to that north and east of the City cemetery, where the city owns all of the land and there are no residences to be supplied with water.

Therefore the engineer contends that the protests filed by the property owners on the north beach are entirely without foundation and cannot be scriously considered.

Scrofula is a bad thing to inherit or acquire, but there is this about it— Hood's Sarsaparilla completely cures even the worst cases.

CREDIT MEN WILL HAVE BANQUET ON SATURDAY

The Utah Association of Credit Men will hold its annual banquet at the Com-mercial club Saturday evening, at which each member of the association will be entitled to one representative. The asso-ciation now numbers more than 100 con-eerns, and it is probable that plates will be laid for 150, including the guests of the association.

REPUBLICANS WIN IN ST. PAUL ELECTION

ST. PAUL, May 2.—Early returns indicate Herbert P. Keller, Republican, defeated H. G. Haus, Democrat, for mayor of St. Paul by a majority of between 4000 and 5000, At 5 o'clock R. T. O'Conner, Democratic leader, conceded the election of Keller by 3500. St. Paul has not had a Republican mayor for fourteen years. The Republicans made their fight reflectingly.
